(b) and (c) The Recovery of Debts due to Banks and Financial Institutions Act, 1993 was enacted on 27th August, 1993. Eight Debts Recovery Tribunals (DRTs) have been established out of the ten Tribunals proposed to be established. Five DRTs were established in the year 1994, one in the year 1996 and remaining two in the year 1997. The slow progress in recovery of debts due to banks through DRTs is due to the fact that right from the date of establishment, the DRTs have been plagued with various problems like write petitions filed in various High Courts, lack of adequate infrastructure which includes inadequate experienced and skilled man-power, inadequate space, non-appointment of Recovery Officers etc. As a result of the write petitions filed in various High Courts, the five DRTs, though established in the year 1994, actually functioned since 1996, when Supreme Court directed in March 1996 that notwithstanding any stay order passed on any writ petition, the DRTs shall resume their functions. Further, DRTs at Chennai, Guwahati and Patna have been established very recently. The disposal of cases by DRTs is expected to improve in the near future with the improvement in the infrastructure and experience gained.

(d) As indicated in reply to part (a) RBI have reported that their present data base does not generate specific information relating to funds loaned by banks to corporates separately and the rate of recovery of the funds advanced to this category of borrowers. The details of non-performing assets of public sector banks for the years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 are at Annexure [See appendix 181, Annexure No. 20]. The details of recovery in NPAs (cash recovery) of public sector banks for these years is at the other Annexure.
